

Roman Pačka is the Head of National Strategy and Policy Unit at the National Cyber and Information Security Agency of the Czech Republic. In this capacity he is responsible for Czech national strategic framework for cyber security and deals with conceptualization of cyber threats and policies on national and international level. Since 2014 he holds the positions of the Alternate member of Management board ENISA and the ENISA's National Liaison Officer in the Czech Republic. He graduated from Security and strategic studies at Masaryk University in Brno and he is an alumnus of Program on Cyber security studies at the George C. Marshall Center - European Center for Security Studies.